

My name is Nomnqophiso Likhanye Ndimma. I am a 29-year-old woman with two wonderful boys that I would love to build a legacy for. My passion for helping people began at a young age, when I saw children living on the streets and eating out of garbage bins. It tore at my heart.

During my high school years, I had a pair of shoes that were torn underneath, and I could feel every thorn, every blade of grass, every stone, water, and the heat of the sun. My friends would make fun of me and it literally killed my self-esteem. That experience made me realize how much it hurts when kids are mocked because of their situation at home. It broke my heart to see how it affected them.

I wanted to create a better future for these young ones by providing uniforms for underprivileged kids so they could feel special and experience that joy of having something brand new. Something that would boost their confidence.

Cheerity is a name formed from “charity” and “cheering,” reflecting my goal of turning pain into joy and happiness. I don’t just want to help children, but also orphans the elderly in old age homes and anyone who needs a helping hand so that we can build a better tomorrow together. I want to reach as many people as I can.

As an orphan myself I know firsthand how it feels to have no one who cares, and that’s what inspires me to make a difference.

Thank you for considering supporting Cheerity.

Sincerely,

Likhanye Ndimma
